The Librarian's Corner

BHA/IBA

Ever since the Getty Research Institute decided it would no longer maintain the premier art historical index, BHA (Bibliography of the History of Art), scholars have been apprehensive. Fear no more!

Proquest/Cambridge Scientific Abstracts (CSA) is providing access to BHA as the IBA, or the International Bibliography of Art. The Library also has subscriptions to Artbibliographies Modern (ABM) and the Design and Applied Art Index (DAAI) through CSA. These databases are available through the Illumina platform from the Ricker Library home page (<http://www.library.illinois.edu/arx>) and through the Online Research Resources of the Library Gateway (<http://www.library.illinois.edu/orr>). IBA covers the years 2008 onwards.

For access to BHA retrospectively, that is, art historical literature including and prior to 2007, The Getty maintains free access to both BHA and RILA (Répertoire de la littérature de l'art) from 1975-2007. See the link on the Ricker Library webpage or the ORR or search the database directly at www.getty.edu/research

Building Technology Heritage Library

The Building Technology Heritage Library, a project of the Association of Preservation Technology, was recently added to the Internet Archive. It may be searched at:

<http://www.archive.org/details/buildingtechnologyheritagelibrary>

Spearheaded by Michael Jackson, FAIA and chief architect at the Illinois Historic Preservation Agency, this resource was created to provide an archive of building construction and conservation. This library will focus on period documents and contemporary publications that are not generally available in most architectural and professional libraries. A particular emphasis is given to architectural trade catalogs and house plan catalogs. The first collection of such material to be scanned is that of the Canadian Centre for Architecture, which houses one of the premier collections. The catalogs may be browsed by subject or keyword and individual titles may be searched. Ricker Library and the University Library of Illinois are contributors to this initiative.
